If we survive this pandemic, make sure to pay them a visit

Bukhara, New Delhi

The iconic New Delhi eatery, Bukhara, took the 45th spot on the list. This restaurant is located inside the grand ITC Maurya hotel in Chanakyapuri. Known for its famous Dal Bhukhara, this restaurant re-entered the list of top 50 restaurants in Asia after a span of few years. It is said that the core dishes served at the Bukhara haven't changed in over 40 years. And the man behind the success of this restaurant is none other than Head Chef JP Singh. Besides the dal, Bukhara also serves some delicious tandoori kebabs and their signature style is to provide patrons with no cutlery, so that the food is enjoyed with your hands and mouth.

Asia's 50 best restaurants 2020 list was announced virtually on Tuesday, March 24, 2020. Generally, a grand ceremony is organised during the presentation of this list. However, due to the coronavirus outbreak, the list was presented via live videos on YouTube and Facebook. On Asia's 50 Best Restaurants 2020 list, only two eateries were Indian. And both of them are located in the capital city of India, New Delhi.

Indian Accent, New Delhi

The only other Indian restaurant to make it to the Asia's 50 Best Restaurants 2020 list is none other than Indian Accent. Taking the 13th spot on the list, this fine dine also took home the award for being the Best Restaurant in India. On its official website, the restaurant is described as an eatery that “showcases inventive Indian cuisine by complementing the flavours and traditions of India with global ingredients and techniques.” Head Chef Manish Mehrotra is credited with finding the right balance between

Even though these were the only two Indian restaurants that could make it to the Asia's 50 Best Restaurants 2020 list, this wasn't the only feat achieved by Indians. Former Best Female Chef in Asia and the only Indian woman to win two Michelin stars, Garima Arora's GAA also found itself on the list. This Bangkok-based restaurant took the 15th spot on the esteemed list, thus adding another feather to Chef Garima's cap.
